They can play a campaign with success. They know what strings to pali and what cards to play. If they stopped there they might claim immunity from blame on the ground that practical politics sanctions lively warfare, but they do not stop there. Their main reliance is on corruption. Their purpose is to place "boodle" where it will "do most good."

Their skill consists in determining how quired that the notice should be published prior to the meeting of the board of pardons. Moreover, in order that information of intention to apply for pardon may be adequately disseminated it would be well to require that notice be published in not less than two papers of general circulation printed in the county where the crime was committed.

as fitted for desperate cases. He knows how to keep within the law. He has risen from the political ranks by his success as a "worker." He despises as child's play stump speaking and the distribution of public documents. Such do very well to amuse the crowd. He has more serious work to do, and he does it.

This visit of Mr. Payne is foreshadowed by Mr. Carle's Washington telegram in the Pioneer Press of the 4th inst. It appears from the dispatch that a conference was held. Nothing was done because Senator quay was absent. But it was believed that "some agent and representative should be sent into the northwest as a sort of consulting engineer" is good. It was suggested that "Col. Dudley would be a proper person to go," but he is making money in Washington as a pension agent, and is perhaps not so strong a Harrrison man as he used to be. "Another suggestion," says Mr. Carle, "is that Henry C. Payne, of Wisconsin, who has skill and experience as a political manager, be sent into the territory as the representative of the national committee." Here is confirmation as strong as holy wit that Payne comes right trop the shadow of the white house.
